

Export Certification – a few helpful pointers

The export certification of your wine can be a daunting task to those of you that are new to the game. We have put together a few points of information that will hopefully make your journey a little easier.

If you are a first timer to the experience or just need to brush up your skills then there is a step by step tutorial on how to create a batch for the MPI E Cert website. You can access this by going on the Portal. It can be located under the production tools and resources, then under the help centre category. "Submitting a WECS entry." Please note this tutorial was made before the rebate from the government ended so the rebate no longer applies. The good news however is that now the cost of the EU test has decreased from $148 to $135.

Points of Interest

- A Sensory Test is valid for Two years.
- A Chemical Analysis is valid for one year.
- A Sensory test is all you require if you are exporting to Australia or the USA.
- An EU Suite covers your general Lab testing.
- A Comprehensive Test is required if you are exporting to Japan and includes a Sorbic Test and EU. More Asian countries are requiring this test so if you are unsure it is best to include this in your chemical analysis. The cost for a comprehensive test is $60 plus the EU test at $135.
- There is no drop down box on the Wine E Cert site so you will need to communicate this to the lab at WineWorks so we know to include this in your application.
- Brazil require extra certification this can be selected on the wine e cert site at an extra cost of $20.
- You will need to select the correct bottler WSMP number for your application to be visible to us for confirmation.
- There are only x 2 sensory panels per week. These are on a Wednesday and Friday. The wine needs to arrive two days prior to the taste for it to be included in the selection.
- AsureQuality will test your wine when they receive it. It usually takes x 3 working days to receive your report. Please add another x 2 days if you have selected Comprehensive.

At WineWorks we offer a service of taking care of most of this for you. All that is required of you is to indicate on your spec sheet the type of certification you require so we can take samples off the line at the time of bottling and this will automatically flag for charging. Once the bottling date arrives you need to make your application on the Wine E Cert site. If you follow the steps indicated in the tutorial we can then send your wine off for you. While we endeavour to send samples daily it is always a good idea to let us know if your samples are urgent so we can alert you if any unforeseen problems arise.

WineWorks is now required by MPI to confirm all your packaging. To make this process easy please always include the WineWorks run number as the bottler reference so we can easily identify your wine. In the event that you are not exporting your entire run it is a requirement that you include the total volume in your application. If for some reason we dispute the amount packaged that you have entered, rest assured that we will contact you with a solution.

If you do not require chemical analysis for some time, please select Sensory on your spec sheet so that only two samples are removed from the line. When you require your chemical analysis just send us a screen dump of your application. An indication of the type of certification you require and let us know if you have done a TPM.

WineWorks is partnered with AsureQuality and we work closely together to offer you a fuss free experience. However if you should choose Hill Laboratories as your laboratory then you will need to let us and Hill Laboratories know you have a sample for collection. If you do not make us aware of this then all lab samples will be sent to AsureQuality.

Hopefully this has answered some of your questions and will make the process a little less of a mystery but should it not we are more than happy to help you with any of your queries regarding WECS so contact Stephanie at Winetech.hb@wineworks.co.nz or Kris at kris.jowett@wineworks.co.nz.
